KPSU

Portland's College Radio

1450 AM : Evenings and Weekends

98.3 FM : On Campus

Online 24/7 : www.kpsu.org

DJ Name: Oatmeal a.k.a. Hugh Heshner

Show: The Oatmeal Hour

History of The Show: 5.5 years, the longest I've done anything besides drink and smoke.

What A Listener Can Expect: I've had lots of great live action on the air. For instance, a couple of years ago, I had a live band playing, while I was getting a tattoo, and interviewing local horror movie producers (all at the same time). But, usually you can hear some awesome heavy classic rock, working up to newer rock, and metal and sludge.

New Release CD Review :

DEVOTCHKA How It Ends

by Dan Parscale

Imagine you are on a date at a trendy restaurant, and you discover that the house band is Pink Martini, led by a heartbroken Antonio Banderas in Desperado. The music the sharp hum of violin hits you like a glass of wine and you feel a sense of urgent passion.

This is the essence of the DeVotchKa experience. How It Ends is a beautiful tear jerking memoir of broken romance set to the symphonic grace of world music and the organic honesty of Americana. The Colorado quartet creates music of sweeping beauty and originality with a spread of instruments ranging from guitar and violin to accordion and theremin. This is music that will make you sit by the telephone on a Friday night, waiting for it to ring.

Nick Urata's vocals are surprisingly crisp and soaring over an endlessly changing melody. The result is momentous and filling- perhaps even too much to take all at once- but never forced. The control he has over his own voice is impressive to say the least, leaping instantly from whisper to moan within a breath. This is the real heart of a sound which is easily accessible, emotional, and altogether fresh. How It Ends is an album which will bring memories gushing out of almost anyone fortunate enough to listen.
